Not illustrated. 1901 Excerpt: .at Glasgow recall the vault of the polygonal chapter-houses which have a central pillar, the oblong division, under the high altar, follows the idea of those that, like York and Southwell, have no pillar, but a flat domical vault, in the middle of the apartment. There is no date attached to the sketch-book of Vilars, but this is sufficiently determined by its contents. M. Quicherat, Professor of Archaeology at the Ecole des Charles of Paris in 1849, has shown that one of the drawings in the book must have been made between 1243 and 1251, that Vilars journey to Hungary was undertaken between 1244 and 1247, and that the book was probably completed and the memoranda added on his return. The French and English editors agree with these conclusions. Vilars note and sketch imply that some degree of novelty attached to the idea of the vault,...
