Excerpt from American Medicine, Vol. 3: A Weekly Journal Founded, Owned, and Controlled by the Medical Profession of America; January-June, 1902 This can be explained by an accumulation of effects from oftr repeated insults until tolerance has been overstepped; or by a progressive degeneration. This we meet in epilepsy, when only years after the injury the first symptom, appears. The English, who have, according to tradition, a particular claim on gout, owe it to the moist climate and the exposure in the much indulged hunting and other outdoor sports, which afford the best chance of getting soaked and chilled. The enjoyment of the good things of this world with which they are charged, they have in common, with many other nations that are not inclined to gout. The glutton who devours delicacies and drinks champagne all day, is in fact the careless fellow who does not mind rain and wet feet and similar little inconveniences, and therefore will get the gout whether he drinks champagne or ditch water. In the time of our wild frontier life, gout and rheumatism were most prevalent, and...
