Not illustrated. 1894 Excerpt: . and of metalleism, we are able to state with perfect clearness and conciseness regarding the above curve and its shadow on a parallel plane, that the rays which cast the shadow are lines of catalleism between the curve and its shadow, and the projections of these rays are lines of metalleism between the projections of the curve and of its shadow. The whole discussion of the projection of shades and shadows, and, indeed, of many other problems of descriptive geometry is thus simplified and clarified, and many of the phenomena of solid geometry are rendered capable of concise and easy statement. The use of these terms is, therefore, herewith respectfully submitted to the consideration of mathematicians and teachers. There are many cases of lines in parallel transference which at first sight appear anything but equidistant throughout; seeming, indeed, to utterly belie the parallelism claimed for...
