The tall, lanky Missourian leaning against the corner of a ramshackle saloon on Locust Street, St. Louis, Missouri the St. Louis of the early forties turned his whiskey-marked face toward his companion, a short and slender Mexican trader, sullenly listening to the latter's torrent of words, which was accompanied by many and excitable gesticulations. The Missourian shook his head in reply to the accusations of his companion. But he was on the boat with us! exclaimed the other. An you lose heemlak theese! the sharp snap of his fingers denoted magic. Thar aint no use o gittin riled, replied Schoolcraft. How in tarnation kin a man keep th trail o a slippery critter like him in these yere crowds Ill git sight o him, right yere. That ees wat you say, rejoined the Mexican, shrugging his shoulders. But wat weel I say to le Gobernador Theese hombre Tomaz Boydhe know vera many teengstoo vera many teengsan he ensult le Gobernador. Madre de Diossooch ensult! He shivered at the thought. Wen I get thee message, I tr-remble! It say Br-ring heem to meor breeng me his ears! I am tol to go to Seor Schoolcr-raft at Eendependencehe ees thee man. I go; an then you lose heem! Bah! You do not know theese Manuel Armijo, le Gobernador de Santa Fe, my fren! tr-remble! You need a good swig, thats what you need, growled Schoolcraft. An if ye warnt a chuckle-head, he said with a flash of anger, we wouldnt a come yere at all; I told ye hes got th prairie fever an shore would come back to Independence, whar I got friends; but nowe had ter foller him! He spat emphatically. Thar...
