From the years of his youth the two names have been entwined in the minds of those who knew him best - since that day when, bound for the Japan sealing grounds and Bering Sea on the Sophie Sutherland (his model for the schooner Ghost of The Sea Wolf ), he first glimpsed to northward the smoke and fire of Kilauea. Through successive visits, including eighteen months spent in the Islands during the last two years of his life, through early misunderstanding and final loving comprehension of him, Jack London and Hawaii have drawn together, with increasing devotion in his heart for Aloha-land - Love-land in his fashion of speech - until at the end he could answer to the long-desired appellation, kamaaina, one-who-belongs, and more. They don t know what they ve got! he said of the American public, when, a decade ago, headed for the South Seas in his own small-boat voyage around the world, he sailed far out of his course that Hawaii might be the first port of call, and threw himself into learning the manifold beauty and wonder of this territory of Uncle Sam. And They don t know what they ve got, he repeated to each new unscrolling of its wonder and beauty during five months of enjoyment and study of land and people. Again in Hawaii after the breaking out of the Great War, he amended: Because they have no other place to go, they are just beginning to realize what they ve got. And, really, the knowledge of the citizen of the States is woefully scant concerning this possession but a few days distant by steamer, and...
