Excerpt from Report on the Results of Investigations Into Cider-Making, Carried Out on Behalf of the Bath and West and Southern Counties Society in the Years 1893-1902 The Object of science is to teach men how to control, so far as may be possible, the forces of Nature. It is evident that before we can control them, we must thoroughly know and understand what these forces are and how they work. It is by studying these natural agents, and then by showing men how to control their effect in the industry with which they are concerned, that science becomes of practical value. Probably no industry depends so much upon natural forces as does that of agriculture; hence no industry should derive greater benefit from science. And this is especially true of that branch of agriculture - the Cider Industry. Cider is the fermented juice of the apple. There are two varieties. Sweet cider, SO called because it has a sweet taste, for fermentation has proceeded only slightly and much of the natural sugar of the juice is loft in the liquid; and dry cider, in which fermentation has proceeded so far that but little of the original sugar remains. Cider made in one district will differ materially from cider made in another district, and that made on one farm will differ from that made on another farm in the same district. Indeed, when these investigations were first started it was even difficult to find two or three barrels in the same cider house which were alike. Uniformity of product is essential to success in all industries, and therefore such a state of affairs was very unsatisfactory to those who were interested in cider...
