Excerpt from Nancy: A Novel Put into a small preserving-pan three ounce of fresh butter, and, as soon as it is just molted, add one pound of brown sugar of moderate quality - Not moderate; the browner the better, interpolates Algy. Cannot say I agree with you. I hate brown sugar-filthy stuff! says Hobby, contradictiously. Not half so filthy as white, if you come to that, retorts Algy, loftily, looking up from the lemon he is grating, to extinguish bis brother. They clear white sugar with but - Keep the 30 since gently over a clear fire for about fifteen minutes, interrupt I, beginning to read again very fast, in a loud, dull relative to hinder further argument, or until a little of the mixture dipped into cold water breaks clear between the teeth without sticking to them. When it is boiled to this point it must be poured out immediately or it will bum. Having galloped jovially along, scorning stops, I here pause out of breath. Wc arc a large family, wo Greys, and we are oil making taffy. Yes,...
