Saint-Gothard Railway. Four of the administrations enumerated above informed me that they regretted that owing to various circumstances they were unable to supply particulars. The others have sent in more or less complete answers to certain applications for descriptive details, but upon the whole the particulars were extremely meagre as regards results obtained in practice. This was in broad outline the condition of affairs I found when embarking upon my report and it will serve to explain why it lacks in details. GENERAL PHOGRAMME. The subject has been divided into three chapters. Chapter I is devoted to a detailed description of the various
