Extrait: .of censure for the simulation of flattery and suspect a bookseller's puff when an author is not broken on the wheel. Then, after admitting the insular bias of English literary judgments based on moral considerations, he points out that in the third chapter of her book Madame de Staël professes to treat of the principal epochs of German literature, but without displaying much historical or antiquarian research. Taylor, well fitted by his own studies to discuss the subject, gives a clear outline of Madame de Staël's account of the history of German literature. He disagrees with Crabb Robinson as to the justness of her opinion of Goethe, for he says that Madame de Staël's seventh chapter, concerning Goethe, is excellent; it displays the observation which knows how to paint and to judge; and it forms in our...
