Gabrielle de Bergerac was never collected by James into book form but originally appeared serialized in the July, August, and September 1869 issues of The Atlantic Monthly. an excerpt from the beginning of: PART I MY good old friend, in his white flannel dressing-gown, with his wig removed, as they say of the dinner-service, by a crimson nightcap, sat for some moments gazing into the fire. At last he looked up. I knew what was coming. Apropos, that little debt of mine Not that the debt was really very little. But M. de Bergerac was a man of honor, and I knew I should receive my dues. He told me frankly that he saw no way, either in the present or the future, to reimburse me in cash. His only treasures were his paintings; would I choose one of them Now I had not spent an hour in M. de Bergeracs little parlor twice a week for three winters, without learning that the Barons paintings were, with a single exception, of very indifferent merit. On the other hand, I had taken a great fancy to the picture thus...
