These leaves are then dried, rolled, faced and mixed with the commoner kinds of tea for sale. The leaves of other plants indigenous to this country are also collected, and by dexterous management, converted into dried counterfeit teas. There can be little doubt that the excessive duty placed upon tea ia a prominent cause of these adulterations at home; for it is not to be supposed for a moment that if genuine tea could be sold at 1s. 6d. per pound, instead of 3s. or 4. which is the present price of the commoner kinds, that any adulteration of the sort in question would be practised. Among the inhabitants of South America, what is called Paraguay tea,1 is almost as extensively used as the Chinese tea is amongst us and in China. Throughout Brazil, Uruguay, Paraguay, the Plate district,...
