There in his childhood friend, Tshiring, a girl from the monpa tribe (Buddhist by faith), he discovers the first feelings love. Eventually she meets with an accident and dies in his presence, but the reverberations of pain ring through his mind. Then, during his school days at a Christian convent, he meets another tribal girl-Mary, with whom he develops emotional ties. Subsequently he proceeds to the metropolis for higher studies. There he comes in touch with the Indian communists, of real flesh blood. Later, he becomes a business executive in the liberalized economy of a resurgent India .In between on a trip to the hills, he meets Mary. Tongue temper loosened by liquor, Raj betrays her trust. On a fateful evening, he betrays her trust. Unable to face the world, Mary leaves for an unknown destination, leaving Raj to search for her, which proves futile. He goes back to the city for his career. Some years later, on receiving the information that Mary had suffered because of being an unwed mother, from an old friend, he is overcome with grief. In his frenetic search for Mary and the child , whom somehow he conjures to be his son deep down in his heart: he is inconsolable. During the search which takes him back to the hills he comes across the greatest shock of his life. Mary was dead and the child- his own son, was at an orphanage .He somehow recovers to meet...
