Excerpt from Mind and Body, Vol. 17: A Monthly Journal Devoted to Physical Education; March, 1910 to February, 1911 In another similar room in the same hospital, during the same period of time, I have been treating my typhoids. Occasionally, I have a typhoid under two years of age, most of them are over three, and the average age about six years. The typhoid cases come from the same class of patients as the pneumonias, and they do so much better in the fresh air that nothing could persuade me to return to the old method of treatment. Similar in every way to the present, but minus the fresh air. The rooms where the typhoids and pneumonias are kept have large windows on two sides, and an Open door on a third side; these are kept Open dav and night; a distinct effort is made to keep the hands and feet of these children warm by gloves, stockings and hot water bags, but the rooms are always cold, except for a few minutes every two or three hours, when the windows...
