Excerpt from God s Purposes in the War: A Sermon Delivered in the Presbyterian Church at Caldwell, N. J., On the Day of National Thanksgiving, August 6, 1863 Thus I have given you a long introduction to my thanks giving address; but thus much I wished to say, hoping that it would be well received by those who hold difierent views, and believing that if thus received, it would do good. In such times as these, we are apt to be in a state of feverish ex citement, too easily yielding ourselves to impulsive feelings and movements, when we specially need the soothing in uence of a calm judgment and an unprejudiced mind. It is said to be the little foxes that spoil the vines, by working among the tender grapes; guard against these, and then we shall have the more strength and union to fight against the more formid able enemy. When a man s house is on fire, it is folly for the neighbors to stand around idly and angrily discuss the ques tion, who set it on fire? Let them go first vigorously to work to put out the fire, and then find out and punish the guilty party. I like the remark of one among us, in politics Opposed to the present administration said he, I am going to do all I can to help the government out of this trouble, and then I am going to call them to an account.
