When newly widowed Virginia Flynn turns an abandoned mansion into the Firefly Inn, she never dreams that the inn s other-worldly guest will play a mysterious part in her plans, starting right with her first visitor. Stacy Brighton left her hometown on the coast of Maine ten years ago for bigger and better things and never looked back. But when her father dies unexpectedly, she s forced to return. She won t spend a minute longer than she has to, though. That town is full of bad memories and she doesn t want to see any of the people she left behind, especially not Reid Callahan. Reid Callahan never wanted anything more than to live his life in Rocky Point. He loves the simple, small-town life and has proudly grown his small lobstering business into one of the premier restaurants in the area. He s made a good life for himself but something seems to be missing. And when Stacy comes back to town, he knows exactly what it is. Too bad Stacy has no intention of staying. or does she? Even their growing attraction might not be enough to soothe old wounds and when their worst fears take root, one of them may have to sacrifice everything they thought they wanted in order to give their hearts another chance.
