Excerpt from Sermon, Preached May 15, 1821: At the Interment of Mrs. Elizabeth Lathrop, Relict of the Rev. Joseph Lathrop, D. D. One of his reflections we have in the words of our text: Man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is hel design, my brethren, to attempt an analysis of this passage, with some reference to the solemn dispensation which has called us together: and may the good spirit of God give such a direction to our meditations as deeply to impress this providence upon all our hearts. 1. The first thought which these words obviously suggest is, the universal mortality of man. Death is not a rare calamity, which befalls a few individuals only, but it happens indiscriminately to the whole race of men. Man dieth. In the conditions of men in the present life, there is a great variety. With respect to fame, wealth, talents, learning and power, we find almost every gradation. One man is saluted by the shouts of public applause, while another is scarcely known beyond the contracted limits of his own neighborhood. Here is the votary of opulence, who revels at a luxurious table, and rolls in a gilded coach; and there is the poor despised beggar, who is fed from day to day, by the hand of charity. On the one hand, we find a penetrating, powerful intellect, and extensive acquirements in literature and science; on the other, a mind clouded with ignorance, and doomed to perpetual sterility. One is destined to occupy a throne, and wield a sceptre, another is confined to a dungeon, and loaded with chains. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare...
