Excerpt from A Letter to Lord Cathcart, President of the Board of Police in Scotland: Concerning the Recovery of Persons Drowned, and Seemingly Dead To this purpose, I would have them Observe, That in men, and other animals, life does not immediately cease upon the cessation of the action of the lungs and heart, and the consequent ceasing of the circulation of the blood. Though the circulation of the blood is necessary to the support of life, the living {late Of animals does not confill: in that alone, but especially depends upon a certain condition in the nerves and muscular fibres, by which they are fenible and irritable, and upon which the action of the heart itself depends. It is this condition, therefore, which may be properly called the vital principle in ammal; and as long as this subsists, or, though much weakened, as long as it can be again restored to its activity and vigour, while at the same time the organization. Of the parts remains entire, it is preserved. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of...
