Createspace, United States, 2013. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Eulalia Callis de Fages, a beautiful young woman from Spain, was married to the much older Pedro Fages, the soldier who became the first Governor of California. Leaving a plush life in Mexico City to make an arduous journey over sea and land by ship, mule and foot, she eventually reached Monterey to discover a primitive dusty settlement with buildings made of mud and straw. * * * She huddled into as small a bundle as she could as the lancha pulled rapidly away from the unfriendly harbor. Between the oarsmen bent to their long sweeps she could glimpse the warehouses, the ribs of a ship under construction. Her tear-filled eyes watched her lovely coach on the shore. One window sent a glancing wink as a ray of the westering sun struck its glass. The flash blinded her. She buried her face in her hands and wept for the velvet upholstery, the silver lanterns, the cushions, the twinkling wheels-and the comfort! She d believed she would ride clear to Monterey. But there it stood on the marshy shore, while she went on in an ill-smelling lancha-only a few boards between her and the darkening dreadful ocean fathoms below. Ay! She must not think of it. Terrible leagues of her journey lay ahead, to be traversed doggedly, day and night, with heat, dust, thirst, weariness and a numbing fear of the unknown robbing her of rest. At the end of each day s travel, Eulalia lay on her pallet feeling that the blessing of oblivion and release from suffering would requite her. Always at the moment when she seemed slipping into unconsciousness, a rude hand gripped her weary heart and shook it cruelly,...
