Perfection Learning. Hardcover. Condition: New. 278 pages. Dimensions: 7.4in. x 4.9in. x 0.9in. I cant remember when Barneys story began but all my life Id heard this story about how a little girl and her father were going to hit it big one of these days. . . . I knew more about race horses than I knew about myself -- I mean myself as a Chinese. Race horses arent any help when Barney lands in the hospital and Casey is sent to live with Paw-Paw -- her maternal grandmother-in San Franciscos Chinatown. Shes not prepared for the Chinese school, the crowds, the noise, the small room she has to share with Paw-Paw -- and shes not prepared for missing Barney. But Paw-Paw tells Casey about Jeanie, the mother Casey never knew, about her true Chinese name, and about the story of the familys owl charm. This shows Casey that being a child of the owl means that sometimes, like this ancestral owl spirit, you can feel like a stranger, trapped in the wrong place, in the wrong time, even in the wrong body. And as Casey begins to understand the intricacies of Chinatown and the people who become her friends, she realizes that this, Paw-Paws home, Jeanie and Barneys home, is her home too. Laurence Yep's fine novel illuminates a rich world of truth, humor, and discovery. San Franciscos Chinatown of the early 60s is the testing ground for 12-year-old Casey who, in finding her roots, forfeits her faith in her compulsive gambler father. SLJ.
