FOREST WORKER, VOL. 8: MAY 1932 (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)

FBC LTD, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Forest Worker, Vol. 8: May 1932 Definite conclusions as to how reproduction is affected by the layer of needles that accumulates on the forest floor where slash is merely scattered or is not disposed of in any way are impossible in the Pacific Northwest, the authors state, because of the scantiness of the data. Such data as are available seem to indicate that undisposed slash favors both germination and survival of subsequent seedlings. G. A. Pearson is cited as having found slash beneficial to reproduction except where rank herbaceous vegetation is present. Pearson also notes, however, that, where the layer of needles exceeds one-half inch in depth, germination of ponderosa pine may be diminished, and states that, on the whole, during the needle-mat period of about five years the establishment of seedlings is retarded rather than promoted. Bates, Hilton, and Krueger also noted that unburned slash hindered to some extent the germination and establishment of lodgepole pine. The same thing has been noted in spruce and fir forests. Where, of course, the needle fall is much heavier than in open pine forests. Perhaps the better spring rain fall conditions in the Northwest tend to counteract the repressive effect of a mat of needles on germination. Obviously, the matter needs further investigation.
