Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: .in the way of calculating the amount of available business will approach the actual possibilities. When telegraph lines were first being put in 100 years ago and even more recently than that, particularly when the cable was laid under the Atlantic, the question of what business the lines would attract might have been asked. Then we were in the position of having to charge rates for the transmission of messages over 100 times as much as those for transporting letters over corresponding distances. It might have been argued that no message could be so important as to justify such a large increase in cost. It is impossible to analyze a new business completely. The interesting fact is that the establishment of the telegraph lines and cables created their own business in large measure. In the case of the airship, when we are so organized that we have a network of airship transportation all over this country, it will be feasible to segregate and specialize our different manufacturing industries much more closely than we do at present. We could produce all our milk on one central farm and ship it to every point in the United States for a few cents per quart. I do not say that this will be done but such a thing is possible. APPENDIX The assumptions used as a basis for the calculations are as follows: (1) All carriers are considered as being fully loaded (2) The most economic size and number...
