Excerpt from Reply of Colonel Orne: To the Attacks of Mr. Nathaniel Greene, and David Henshaw, and Others, in the Boston Statesman The Statesman party of Boston, as it is generally termed, is composed of a small body of low, unprincipled intriguers, who, by some means or other, with the aid of Duff Green, have contrived to obtain from the president appointments to office of the first importance, much to the astonishment of themselves, from their unsuitableness to fill them, to the deep chagrin and disgust of the community, at the degradation of public trusts, and to the great and almost irreparable injury of the national administration. This intriguing body, having so far deceived the government as to obtain important and lucrative trusts, at their hands, have found it necessary to support one imposition, by the practice of another and after causing the government to neglect their true friends, they are tempted to vilify and slander them. The first attacks were made by Duff Green, which was overlooked for many months - the Boston Statesman followed up the game by the vilest insinuations; and, finally, the whole Duff Green presses opened upon them with the more polished but envenomed shafts of anti-janus. This drew forth the letters of Columbus, about which so much has been said, and to which the Statesman party have attempted a reply, under the name of Nathaniel Green, the Boston printer post master. This reply, however, consists, not in defence of themselves; for that seems even in their own opinion, a hopeless project; but in an attack on Col. Orne. This appeared in September in the Boston Statesman; was afterwards republished in the Washington...
