Fox, Vol. 5: Letters on the Corn Laws, by a Norwich Weaver-Boy; And Extracts From Letters by Publicola MY lord, - A parliamentary leader has no vacations. For you this is no season of rest and relaxation. Although the night does not summon you to debate, and the day is free from official cares, yet have you that upon your mind which must frequently task severely your thoughts and faculties. The House of Commons is still sitting in your brain. The next session has already commenced in your imagination. You must observe intently the course of events. The position has to be marked out which the party will occupy with whose guidance you are intrusted. The campaign must be planned. And never, perhaps, had Chieftain, political or military, greater reason than yourself, while his followers reposed or sported, for anxiety and watchfulness. You are the leader of an Old party in new circumstances. Much difficulty might not be presented by that fact to an intelligent politician, were the circumstances such as to...
