Ce qui arriva a Christophe Colomb, de se croire au Japon quand il n etait qu a la Havane, est l histoire de bon nombre d hommes qui s aventurent dans des entreprises gigantesques. Leur merite, leur gloire est rarement d atteindre le but precis qu ils s etaient propose, mais seulement d avoir fait en route une decouverte importante a laquelle ils n avaient nullement songe. Raymond Lulle en offre une preuve frappante. Pendant soixante ans, cet homme a etudie toutes les sciences; il a expose continuellement sa vie pour detruire la religion de Mahomet et gagner la palme du martyr, et cependant il n est connu de nos jours que comme un des plus grands chimistes du XIIIe siecle. Personne n ignore aujourd hui que les recherches souvent extravagantes des hommes qui, depuis un temps immemorial, se sont appliques a la science hermetique, a la transmutation des metaux, en un mot a faire de l or, ont prepare effectivement les voies aux savants qui, plus tard, fonderent la chimie, cette science destinee a servir de point de depart, de centre et de lien a toutes les autres. Mais on se fait en general une idee fausse de ces chimistes, de ces artistes, comme ils s intitulaient au moyen-age. Les savants eux-memes les connaissent a peine aujourd hui, et quand Roger Bacon, Albert-le-Grand, Arnaud de Villeneuve ou Raymond Lulle figurent par hasard dans les traditions populaires ou dans les predictions d almanachs, ce n est ordinairement que comme inventeurs de secrets, faiseurs de prodiges et sorciers celebres.
