If possible the patient should do this himself. Or the dose may be taken in a little of the Aylesbury condensed milk, or rubbed down with sugar in a mortar, as first recommended, I believe, by Dr. Bumstead.1 Like all strong preparations of hop, lupulin sometimes produces headache, but a few days use of the remedy generally witnesses a termination of this symptom. (r.) Digitalin may be ranked with this class of sedatives. It requires, however, to be handled with extreme care, from its wellknown power of depressing the action of the heart. Most persons cannot bear more than the fiftieth of a grain at a time, and even this quantity should not be continued long. It may be given dissolved in spirit, or in the form of a pill, although Mr. Squire, in his excellent Companion...
